

ABSTRACT

The system and device of the present invention is designed for the purpose of providing a charging apparatus to charge the drive system battery or batteries and a service system battery in electrically powered vehicles while the vehicle is operated, thereby extending the driving range of such vehicle. Though spent energy can not be totally replace, a considerable portion of the spent energy from the batteries can be replaced while the vehicle is operated.